To the DoorDash Hiring Team,

I recently came across the posting for the Associate Manager, Marketplace Strategy & Operations role. I am certain that my background in solving big strategic hurdles and collaboratively building technical solutions makes me a perfect fit for your team. I have built my career on taking "0 to 1" initiatives from concept to execution, leveraging a blend of technical data skills and strategic cross-functional leadership.

The role involves developing the targeting strategy for U.S. Restaurant Acquisition, a challenge that requires rigorous data analysis and operational execution. At M Science, I demonstrated this dual capability by leading a cross-functional overhaul of our pricing and packaging models. I coordinated Sales, Data Science, and Research teams to build a data-driven model that aligned our internal incentives with market demand. The result was a new deal approval process and monetization strategy that drove a 35% revenue increase.

I understand that a successful targeting strategy requires robust infrastructure. I have a proven track record of rolling up my sleeves to build the backend systems necessary for such a process. For example, I architected a master data system within Salesforce to unify our metadata and automate entitlements. This effectively built the scalable "semantic layer" needed for our product analytics and served as the backbone for our customer portal and internal reporting.

Additionally, my technical proficiency allows me to be self-sufficient in analyzing marketplace dynamics. At YipitData, I designed complex ETL pipelines and validated data integrity across REST APIs and SQL sources. This initiative not only ensured leadership had accurate data but also cut our reporting delay rate in half.

I excel at influencing without authority and solving ambiguous problems with data. I am eager to bring my uniquely suited skillset as a "Swiss Army Knife" candidate to help solve the Marketplace team's most complex problems.

Sincerely,

Siddharth Bhaskaran
